

William F. Augustine's photograph of the White Horse Tavern in Camden County. According to Augustine, it had been a stage coach stop along the old White Horse Pike to the shore and later served as a watering hole for bicyclists on the way from Philadelphia and Camden to Atlantic City.

The Isaac Van Campen Inn, built about 1750 and located along Mine Road in Sussex County. Augustine writes: "A safe haven during the French and Indian War, lodging place for John Adams, General Horatio Gates, General Pulaski."

A group of buildings which housed workmen at the New Brooklyn Glass House in Gloucester County in the 1800's. Augustine took the photograph in 1938. Today the buildings are gone and the site of the glass house remains a mystery.

The "Victorian Mansion" in Cape May City, originally named Cape Island. The photographer describes the scene: "It was on the porch of this house that an old colored mammy would sit in a big rocking chair and signal to the gamblers inside that the wrong persons were approaching."

An old hotel on the north end of Tuckerton in Ocean County (above) and the Ten Brook Inn of Readington in Hunterdon County (right), built in the 1700's and once an important stage stop between Philadelphia and Newark and Jersey City.
